whether you take the other, I think for the first time we will have addressed the special problems of the special session and we will have in effect a set of rules for the special session that make a lot of sense. So what is going to be proposed to you, first of all, you have before you the Rules Committee version which I will explain to you in just a minute, and there is a small technical amendment that Senator Vickers and I have to that, but when I explain it to you, I will explain it to you with the technical amendments so you have the whole proposal in your mind. After that, then Senator DeCamp will move to substitute his proposal for the Rules Committee proposal and you can consider what Senator DeCamp has to say, and basically that will be the structure of the debate at least insofar as the amendments that have been filed so far. The special session and the fact that the special session is limited to a few days time, generally, at least every time in my experience has been a short session, changes the whole dynamics of the legislative process. And when we are talking about a regular session, of course, we are talking about a process that has a very strong committee system, and it is the committee system that can hold a bill for a long period of time if it is done subtly. It is a committee system that can kill a bill and it takes 30 votes on the floor of the Legislature to raise the bill. In short, it is a system that gives so much power to the committees that when you are dealing with a short period of time it effectively gives the committees the power to end the special session unless you are going to suspend all the rules that we have. For example, under the rules right now and they pertain to special sessions, if you are trying to get a bill out of committee, technically you have to wait 20 days if the committee does not act on it. Well, of course, if you are talking about a special session, you can't let 20 days expire or you have driven everybody out of business. So you have to suspend the rules and get 30 votes in order to hear a bill. Likewise, if they kill a bill, it takes 30 votes in order to get a hearing on it before the whole body. And we are talking about special sessions where the Governor or where a group of legislators have asked the legislative body as a whole to consider a specific item, or one or two specific items. So the whole idea is to get a hearing before the whole legislative body. So the thrust of my amendment, which is also the thrust of Senator DeCamp's amendment, and which I think after talking to people last special session was the general philosophy of this body, is that the role of the committee should not be eliminated but
